

Breaking the Communication Barrier: Theory and Practice of Transactional Analysis +

Discover this exciting, rational and practical method for understanding human behavior, communication, relationships, and personal growth.

Whether your interest is psychotherapy, training, personal effectiveness, improving relationships, communication skills, or leadership, this course will help you be more effective immediately!

Learn:

- How to understand yourself and others
- How to communicate effectively
- How to prevent/resolve conflict
- How to deal with difficult people
- How to improve listening skills
- How to handle co dependency
- How to live the win-win way
- How to express feelings and wants
- How to change problem patterns

The TA 101 is a comprehensive introduction to the theory and practice of Transactional Analysis. Transactional Analysis, as developed by Eric Berne, M.D. is both a theory of personality and of human interaction. It is broadly applied in psychotherapy, education, counseling, coaching and organizational development. This class also includes a few aspects of Neuro-Linguistic Programming (NLP), the process of modeling excellence in human behavior started by Dr. John Grinder and Richard Bandler, which also has broad application.

Our format is a combination of lecture, group discussion, experiential exercises, and fun under the leadership of Certified Teaching Instructors of the International Transactional Analysis Association and a Master Practitioner in NLP. Participation in this course qualifies you for Regular Membership in the ITAA.
